

Dr. David Forbush Bio

Dr. Forbush is the associate director at USU's Center for the School of the Future. He has engaged a myriad of topics and challenges in education over his 30+ years of service in the field of education. Select roles in education include special education teacher trainer, school district special education director and Title-1 director, project of national significance director, and developer and director of a statewide professional development system.

Dr. Forbush was recognized as the Special Education Director of the year in Utah and has research and implementation interests in the learning, behavior, implementation, and systems sciences. His current CSF work includes supporting USU's charter school authorizing and work, development of and deployment of teacher merit award systems as per CSF's invitation by the Utah Legislature. Dr. Forbush regards himself as an outcomes junkie in education.